Examiner's Detailed Office Action

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

1. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

2. The invention as disclosed in claims 1-18 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 101 as being non-statutory subject matter, as set forth in Interim Guidelines for Examination of Patent Applications for Subject Matter Eligibility. The claims are directed to an abstract idea rather than a practical application of an abstract idea which would produce a "useful, concrete or tangible results." Moreover, the claims fails to provide a practical application and is insufficient to establish a real world "tangible" result.

3. Claims 1-12, 17 & 18 are considered to be directed to a method and apparatus that as claimed, does not produce any "useful, concrete or tangible results" that has a real-world practical application. Moreover, the claims are directed to an abstract idea rather than a practical application of an abstract idea which would produce a "useful, concrete or tangible results." Accordingly, the claims fail to provide a practical application and is insufficient to establish a real world “tangible” result, see In re Warmerdam, 31 USPQ2d, 1354.

4. Claims 13-16 are considered to be directed to a storage device i.e., a computer readable medium having stored thereon instructions, a software program for controlling a processor.

However, the software program as claimed does not produce any “useful, concrete or tangible results” that has a real-world practical application. Moreover, the claims are directed to an abstract idea rather than a practical application of an abstract idea which would produce a “useful, concrete or tangible results.” In other words, merely manipulating data not tied to the real-world is not patent eligible subject matter, see In re Warmerdam, 31 USPQ2d, 1354.

Accordingly, the claims fail to provide a practical application and is insufficient to establish a real world “tangible” result.

5. Devoid of such, applicant’s claimed invention is an abstract idea e.g., a computational model or a mathematical manipulation of a function or equation. A process that merely manipulates an abstract idea or performs a purely mathematical algorithm is non-statutory despite the fact that it might inherently have some usefulness. see In re Sarkar, 588 F.2d at 1335, 200 USPQ at 139, wherein the court explained why this approach must be followed:

No mathematical equation can be used, as a practical matter, without establishing and substituting values for the variables expressed therein. Substitution of values dictated by the formula has thus been viewed as a form of mathematical step. If the steps of gathering and substituting values were alone sufficient, every mathematical equation, formula, or algorithm having any practical use would be per se subject to patenting as a “process” under 101. Consideration of whether the substitution of specific values is enough to convert the disembodied ideas present in the formula into an embodiment of those ideas, or into an application of the formula, is foreclosed by the current state of the law.

6. A claim is limited to a practical application when the invention as claimed, produces a concrete, tangible and useful result; i.e., the invention recites a steps or a process or act of producing something that is concrete, tangible and useful. See AT &T, 172 F.3d at 1358, 50

Art Unit: 2121

USPQ2d at 1452. See MPEP § 2106(IV) The claimed invention as a whole must accomplish a practical application. That is, it must produce a “useful, concrete and tangible result.” State Street, 149 F.3d at 1373, 47 USPQ2d at 1601-02. Remember, the claims define the property rights provided by a patent, and thus require careful scrutiny. Therefore, it is not enough to set forth invention in the specification. The claims must also reflect the scope and breath of applicant’s invention. In re Morris, 127 F.3d 1048, 1054-55, 44 USPQ2d 1023, 1027-28 (Fed. Cir. 1997). Limitations appearing in the specification but not recited in the claim are not read into the claim. In re Prater, 415 F.2d 1393, 1404-05, 162 USPQ 541, 550-551(CCPA 1969). The situation in this application appears to be more difficult since it does not appear that the practical application is contained within the specification.
